The Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis is due to rule on an appeal of the Dollarway School Board's decision that Ne-🐚 students may not transfer om an all-Negro school to a predominantly white school after they pass the first grade. In both cases, Negroes in effect charge that the school boards are using the placement laws as a device to circumvent or minimize court-ordered integration. The placement law has been on its face by federal courts. But school boards were arned that they must use the law "in good faith."

"I expect rulings in both cases at any moment," Friday said. Then we will know whether the school boards of the two communities have to make major revisions in their present policies." The Dollarway School Board told a federal court it would not allow
